Part-Time Director, Jewish Music Institute

(24-32 hours per week)

Circa £ 35k salary (pro-rated)

Based Central London

Are you passionate about music? Jewish music? Do you have a desire to celebrate its diversity, its heritage, and help both to preserve this and also to develop it to bring it to contemporary audiences today in the Jewish and non-Jewish world? If so, this is the perfect opportunity for you.

After 28 years at the helm of the JMI, Geraldine Auerbach, its founder, is relinquishing her role as Director at the end of this year. Under her leadership, the JMI has become a world-renowned organisation with specialist areas from the music of Ashkenazi/Klezmer, Sephardi, Israeli, Synagogue, Suppressed music and Western Classical. Each year JMI puts on events to bring these wonderfully diverse musical genres to ever increasing Jewish and non-Jewish audiences.

The role will take effect from 1 January, 2012. Candidates must be able to demonstrate either experience of or a passion for music (preferably Jewish music), high order organisational skills, a successful track record in managing people and experience of managing budgets, outstanding communication skills (written, verbal and presentation), and finally be someone who will be truly versatile and adaptable and do whatever it takes to deliver wonderful Jewish music events, pioneering academic projects, continuously replenish the funds required, and take the JMI to new levels. And just as importantly you must be hard-working, pro-active, bright, articulate and perceived as a natural leader.
